

Financial Planning Guide

Oegema,
Nicholson
Financial Inc.

Jeff Richer, CHS
Partner

Philippe Letendre, RHU
Financial Security Advisor

Lesley – Anne Oegema, BBA
Financial Security Advisor

Oegema, Nicholson Financial Inc.
1451 Woodroffe Ave.
Ottawa, ON K2G 1W1

Telephone: (613) 686-6338
Fax: (613) 482-8193

E-mail: jricher@ona.ca
pletendre@ona.ca
laoegema@ona.ca

Website : <http://www.ona.ca>

FOCUS ON INVESTING

What to do when an investment declines in price

“One of my investments is down. Should I sell or buy more?”

This is definitely one of the age-old financial questions. And, as is the case with so many of these dilemmas, there is no definitive right or wrong answer.

But what you can do is ask yourself this: If I had X dollars today, would I buy that same investment? It's your answer to this question that will allow us to assess the security's current relevance within your overall portfolio. Then, we can map out a strategy to buy, sell, or stay the course, pending future opportunities.

So, let's look at it methodically. Would you buy this investment again?

Yes. This means that at least some of the reasons you bought it in the first place remain valid and, despite the downturn, you still believe it has potential. Let's look at how we can capitalize on the price drop as a buying opportunity.

No. Let's assess if selling might be a good idea. It could be that the market outlook for the stock may no longer be favourable. Or perhaps it no longer meets your objectives. For example, it may no longer match your risk profile as an investor.

In this case, we can make a plan to sell, with the goal of minimizing actual losses while taking advantage of any tax-loss selling opportunities.

I'm not sure. This is just as reasonable an answer as "yes" or "no." If you're not sure, let's review your overall portfolio to ensure all of your investments continue to meet your objectives, time frame, and circumstances. ■

Global economic engines may help drive your portfolio

For six long years, investors have worried that the crisis in Europe was virtually unfixable. Fears that the Euro itself would be dissolved only added to the malaise. But dramatic improvements in Japan and across much of Europe have combined to make many investors feel more optimistic than ever.

Is it even possible that Europe and Japan, two of the most downtrodden economies of the recent past, are now ripe with potential? Let's take a look at some of the signs and key indicators that may provide some insight into the potential of these regions.

Economic indicators

The European Union is stabilizing, the economy is growing, and securities in the Eurozone may be underpriced relative to the U.S. and other developed markets. Even the so-called PIIGS of Europe (Portugal, Italy, Ireland, Greece, and Spain) are showing signs of, if not actually gaining traction, at least no longer holding back the rest of the continent.

In fact, as a group, European equity funds have returned an average 23.1% for 2013,¹ their best showing since 2006.

Meanwhile, in Japan, the new prime minister has had more success kick-starting the economy over the last 12 months than the nation has seen over the past 20 years. Exports are up, consumer spending is up, and infrastructure spending is way up and will continue to grow as the clock ticks toward the 2020 Olympics in Tokyo. The list of improvements is so long and dramatic, the global press has dubbed Prime Minister Abe's policies "Abenomics."

As 2013 drew to a close, the Bank of

Japan's closely watched Tankan survey added even more fuel to the economic fire when it revealed that business sentiment among both small and mid-sized companies was positive for the first time in 22 years.² This suggests that Abenomics is not just taking hold among the largest companies, but that optimism and genuine reform are trickling down throughout the economy.

Confidence indicators

How else do people signal their confidence in an economy? Well, in part, by visiting the region. Here again, we see evidence of real improvements.

International tourism is up across both Europe and Japan. In the first nine months of 2013, Europe saw a 6% jump overall, with a big spike in the UK, where visitorship was up 18%. Even beleaguered Greece welcomed 15% more foreign visitors. Japan notched up an impressive 23% increase.³ That's a lot of people infusing these economies with cash and economic stimulation.

Even if your plans don't include a vacation in Europe or Japan this year, you can still participate in these economies by investing in them. Yes, there are risks, which is why it's best to invest only as part of a diversified portfolio. For most investors, professionally run, actively managed mutual funds provide an appropriate way to access the potential growth of international markets.

If you'd like to learn more about opportunities in Europe, Japan, or any international market, please speak with us. We can help you review the opportunities and select specific funds based on your objectives, time horizon, and current holdings. ■

¹ To Dec. 20, 2013. Source: Morningstar.

² The Yomiuri Shimbun, The Japan News, Dec. 16, 2013.

³ UNWTO Tourism Highlights, 2013 Edition.

Boost diversification

In addition to growth potential, adding international funds to your portfolio can enhance your portfolio's diversification. As you can see from the charts below, Canada's markets are dominated by the financials and energy sectors, while Europe has significant exposure to healthcare and industrials and Japan to information technology.

Source: MSCI Canada Index (gross returns, Canadian dollar), MSCI Europe Index (gross returns, euro), and MSCI Japan Index (gross returns, Japanese yen), November 2013

4 ways we can facilitate a smooth, effective family meeting

According to a recent poll from a major Canadian financial institution, more than half of Canadians are expecting an inheritance.¹ And yet, few of us actually discuss this with our families. In that same survey, 61% of Canadians whose mother or father had died with a will had never spoken to their parents about the terms of those wills.

The fact is, most of us dread talking about estate planning, family finances, and just about everything related to aging, illness, or death. Procrastinate no longer! Let's work together to take charge of having this important dialogue with your aging parents and/or your adult children. Specifically, we can help you in the following areas.

Establishing parameters

A good place to start is by determining the specific points you want to discuss. Your will? Ownership of the family cottage or other sentimental assets? Healthcare, long-term care, or end-of-life decision-making?

Beware of overwhelming yourself or your participants by trying to do too much in one sitting. It's possible that two (or more) meetings could be more productive and constructive than one.

Choosing attendees

Depending on the specifics of the meeting's agenda, you might want to ask your children and/or parents, siblings, or other beneficiaries to attend. It may also be appropriate to invite people from outside your immediate family — for example, your legal counsel, accountant, caregiver, or power of attorney.

Facilitating the meeting

There are a number of ways you might choose to conduct your meeting, such as a workshop or roundtable discussion, rather than as a presentation. You may find it useful to have us act as your facilitator, to guide the discussion and keep things on topic.

With a clear agenda and an impartial third-party facilitator, the meeting may be more productive and less emotional.

Following up

After the meeting, we can help you reach out to the attendees to make sure your key points were clearly communicated. If there were any next steps to be carried out (for example, forms to be filled out or documents notarized), we can ensure they are being completed. ■

1 Investors Group, "Trillion Dollar Wealth Transfer — Myth or Reality?" February 2012.

ESTATE PLANNING

Protect your executor with liability insurance

Most of us know that acting as executor for an estate carries a significant burden of responsibility. But what you might not realize is that the executor is personally liable for any errors or omissions that happen while the estate is under the executor's watch.

Given that executors frequently are trusted family members with little or no experience in the role, this opens up the possibility that your executor could be held financially responsible for mistakes or negligence in settling your estate. Likewise, if you have been named as a loved one's executor, that onus could fall on you.

In addition to seeking financial restitution for mistakes and oversights (whether intentional or not), beneficiaries may seek compensation for anything from favouritism, diminishing the value of the estate, conflict of interest, and poor decision-making, to fraud.

One way to protect your estate, your heirs, and your executor from the costly consequences of such errors is with executor insurance. This is an insurance policy that specifically covers the costs of negligence, errors, omissions, and legal fees should your executor need to go to court to defend his or her actions.

Executor insurance can be a small price to pay for peace of mind. Policies are remarkably affordable for the protection and security they offer and they are available for virtually any size of estate.

Please call our office to discuss how this kind of policy might benefit your family. ■

Commodities: More than just crude oil and pork bellies

Commodities have been the bedrock of stock markets since the dawn of investing. To this day, the prices of gold, oil, corn, and hogs are part of virtually every business broadcast.

Economists and money managers even use commodity pricing as a leading indicator of the overall economy. Copper is frequently referred to as “Dr. Copper” because it is such a prescient market gauge.

But what do commodities really represent? How risky are they? And should they be part of your investment portfolio? Here’s what you need to know.

What are commodities?

Commodities are “hard assets.” That is, they are materials with an intrinsic, measurable value, such as platinum, sugar, and cotton. They differ from other investments in that they are generally accepted to be uniform in quality. One cubic foot of natural gas, for example, is the same in Canada as it is everywhere else in the world, unlike say, a cell phone which has countless variations.

Commodities literally make up the fabric of our lives and have often been considered a hedge against inflation. If the cost of living is going up, chances are the price of gold and coffee are going up, too. And, because they represent tangible goods, they may hold at least some of their value when other equities are on a downtick.

Forecast calls for chance of highs

As emerging markets grow, so does their appetite for commodities. In China, for example, infrastructure growth is fuelling consumption of metals, including copper, aluminum, and zinc.

Global demand for silver, which waned dramatically when it fell out of favour for use in film and coins, has been reinvigorated by its use in electronics and jewellery. And platinum is hot again for the age-old reason that demand is high and supply is short.

Agricultural commodities, including corn, coffee, cattle, and wheat, are also looking good. After all, there is no alternative to eating, and increasingly prosperous populations are developing a taste for Western food.

The risk factor

Despite their potential, commodities are, by definition, risky. Some come from politically unstable countries. Others are highly susceptible to changes in weather: Drought in Australia is hobbling wheat production, while warmer-than-usual winters in North America have lessened demand for natural gas.

Diversification can help mitigate the risk, as can investing indirectly — for example, through investment funds or by purchasing companies related to the production or transportation of energy, metals, or agricultural goods, rather than purchasing the commodities themselves or commodities futures.

If you’d like to learn more about commodities and explore the role they might play in your portfolio, give us a call. We can look into investments that offer exposure to a variety of different commodities or something that’s very commodity-specific. As always, we are pleased to help you choose the investments best suited to you. ■

Max your tax refund

For many people, spring is the most wonderful time of the year. And it’s not just the weather; it’s the prospect of a tax refund. If you’re expecting a windfall, keep in mind that some financial decisions are more valuable than others. Here are three ways to make the most of that money.

1 Pay down high-interest debt

If you were in a store and saw a $500 television marked down to $250, you’d think it was Boxing Day. Paying off your debts is like Black Friday for your finances.

In the 40% tax bracket, you have to earn $1.66 to pay off a $1 debt. Factor in the interest charges, and paying down high-interest debt (credit cards and consumer loans) is an extremely constructive use of your money.

2 Pay back an HBP loan

If you withdrew money from your Registered Retirement Savings Plan (RRSP) under the RSP home buyers’ loan plan in 2012 or earlier, you have to repay 1/15th of the amount you borrowed in 2014. If you don’t, the repayment amount will be added to your taxable income for 2014.

3 Contribute to your RRSP

If you have sufficient contribution room available, consider ploughing your refund into your RRSP. At a marginal tax rate of 44%, a $2,500 RRSP contribution would reduce your 2014 income tax bill by about $1,100.

If you’re expecting a tax refund, be sure to come in and see us. We can help you review your options and put it to the best use possible, based on your specific circumstances. ■

This newsletter has been written (unless otherwise indicated) and produced by Ariad Communications.

Vol. 28, No. 1 © 2014 Ariad Communications. This newsletter is copyright; its reproduction in whole or in part by any means without the written consent of the copyright owner is forbidden. The information and opinions contained in this newsletter are obtained from various sources and believed to be reliable, but their accuracy cannot be guaranteed. Readers are urged to obtain professional advice before acting on the basis of material contained in this newsletter. Readers who no longer wish to receive this newsletter should contact their financial advisor. ISSN 1205-5840

